

Invitation to CSDP course on
The challenges of securing maritime areas for the European Union
(Training Activity Number 23-24/36/1)

The Hellenic Supreme Joint War College (HSJWC), under the auspices of the European Security and Defence College (ESDC), has the pleasure and honour of inviting you to the course on the challenges of securing maritime areas for the European Union, which will be held from 16 to 19 October 2023 at the HSJWC premises.

Since 80 % of world trade is maritime, two thirds of energy resources are transported by sea, and 99 % of international data are transferred through submarine cables, the EU should address all current and emerging maritime threats and challenges in order to secure the well-being of its Member States and the world order.

Greece's long history and development are closely related to the sea, creating a strong maritime culture over the centuries as well as the ability to understand new trends and actors in the field. Thessaloniki, a port of strategic value for the security of the European continent in the Eastern Mediterranean, is an excellent venue for this course. Distinguished professionals from Member States will support the activity and promote the principles of the EU.

Thus, the course on the challenges of securing maritime areas for the European Union aims to develop and promote a better understanding of the European Union's Global Strategy and Strategic Compass, as essential parts of the Common Foreign and Security Policy, focusing on the marine environment. It consists of an e-learning part and a series of in-person lectures (both parts being compulsory). Participants will have the opportunity to network and share views and perspectives in the field of CSDP.

You are kindly invited to nominate participants for the course on the challenges of securing maritime areas for the European Union. We are looking forward to an enthusiastic contribution and your valuable feedback.

Commandant of the
Hellenic Supreme Joint War College

Major General Alexandros KEFALAS
